Manager's Comment

Fears of a stagflationary regime, combined with the Federal Reserve's tightening cycle and below-forecast tech quarterlies, drove the Nasdaq to record its worst month since October 2008 (-13.3%) -22% since early 2022, while the S&P 500 lost 8.8% for the month with a -14% loss since January.

Drivers under investors' lens are:

- Inflation: up from 7% to 8.5%, not followed by major wage increases, which remain virtually unchanged in the latest quarter. Annual inflation in the Eurozone rose to 7.5% from 5.9% in February, particularly driven by increases in energy prices. Wages do not follow price trends, increasing the likelihood of a recession (period of stagnation).
- Restrictive central banks: The FOMC will continue to tighten monetary policy in an orderly manner through a series of interest rate hikes and will begin to reduce the balance sheet at a rapid pace starting with the next meeting in May, where a 50 bp increase is likely. The ECB continues post-pandemic Quantitative Easing while keeping interest rates unchanged. At the end of QE in the third quarter a gradual increase in rates is likely.
- Lockdown in China: China is currently facing strong inflation and lockdown problems, but unlike the West, the Chinese central bank is still being accommodative. Positive news regarding ADRs listed in the USA, as Chinese companies have opened their balance sheets to American auditors, reducing the risk of delisting that has been hovering for several years.
- Earning season: among the Big 5 Tech players - Apple, Microsoft, Alphabet, Meta and Amazon - Amazon stood out for missing estimates and giving bearish guidance compared to forecasts. All other tech giants performed impressively, though higher expenses and margin pressures seem to be recurring themes from "Big 5 Tech" as well. Overall, total earnings of S&P500 companies were up +3.9% compared to the same period last year; revenues were up 13.4%.

In this context, which is particularly difficult and negative with regard to the main equity markets and indices, we further reduced equity exposure at the beginning of the month by around 15%, reducing the Robotics strategy (from 30% to 20%) and Startech China (from 8% to 3%), bringing the equity component down from 58% to around 43%. On the market lows reached between April 26 and 27, we began to accumulate positions, increasing the Robotics strategy by 15% and Startech China by 8%. The equity component at the end of the month is therefore about 66%. We will continue to monitor key levels and enter gradually if macroeconomic conditions turn out to be more positive.

Equity hedges between 10 and 20% have been made, lowering the equity component on days close to days with higher volatility.

The geopolitical and macroeconomic concerns that loom over investor sentiment still remain the Covid, and possible blockades even localized in small areas, more hawkish central banks, economic growth and the labor market, and finally the war conflict between Russia and Ukraine.
